1. PREPARATORYWORK

Time flies, and one day you will have to look for the job. In this unit you'll learn how to write a letter of job application, curriculum vitae (CV) = resume (American version), a short written account of your education and past employment.

Besides, you'll be given some hints (advice) on how to behave during an interview.

How to write a job application

The job-winning tips from professionals:

1. Put your address, telephone number and date in the top right-hand corner and the name of the person you are applying to on the left, level with the date. Write the company name and address below. Leave a line between paragraphs.

2. First paragraph — a polite one-sentence opening explanation of why you are writing.

3. Tell them you know that they are busy people but stress that your CV proves you are worthy of their time too.

4. Describe yourself like a product on sale. List your skills and such personal qualities as high motivation, enthusiasm and adaptability.

5. If you have qualifications, list them briefly.

6. A positive attitude is important, so explain why it's the only firm you want to work for.

7. Ask for an interview. Say you are happy to come in for a chat at any time, even if there are no jobs available now. Thank the readers for their time and remind them you are waiting for a reply. Use "Yours sincerely"¹¹ if you're writing to a named person and "Faithfully" if you started "Dear Sir/Madam". Sign your letter at the bottom left and print your name clearly below.

Tel.

I am writing to enquire about the possibility of employment with your company. I can offer a variety of skills from practical to clerical, any role would suit at present time. I enclose my CV for your attention.

For the past two years I have been engaged in casual voluntary work at Queens Medical Center. This has kept me busy and has led to meeting new people. A position at your company, however, would allow me to resume a working role.

I am adaptable, reliable and willing to retrain. From packing to office work, my past experience may be useful to you, given the opportunity.

If there is a position available at this time, I can be contacted on (telephone No) in the afternoons and would be more than willing to come down for an interview. If not then would you please keep my details on hand for the near future.

Yours faithfully

2 YOUR CV (CURRICULUM VITAE)

Always type it on unlined white paper, preferably a single sheet.

Write your name, address and telephone number.

Put your health record, date of birth and marital status.

In the next section, note down your education. Put any qualifications on the next line.

Next, detail your work history, starting with your most recent job. Give dates, employers and describe your duties.

List hobbies and interests and put extra information in a separate section.

End by saying that two referees are available on request - not naming them leaves you free to choose the best ones for particular jobs. Remember the longer an application, the less chance it has of being read.

Never send a photo-copied letter - it looks as though you don't care.

Always be positive and never apologise for being You.

HOW TO BEHAVE DURING AN INTERVIEW

It's evident that getting a job depends on many factors, among them writing a strong job application and CV or resume. Your behaviour during an interview, however, is often the best and often the most important stage in getting a job.

Interviews may be conducted by one or by several people.

The interview is an opportunity for the applicant to project his/her personality and convince the interviewers of his/her suitability for the job.

1. Pay attention to the way you are dressed.

When you are properly dressed you demonstrate respect and consideration for those with whom you interact.

Your hairstyle, nails and choice of cosmetics will contribute to your appearance.

Your clothing should meet the requirements of business style. It's very important that you should feel comfortable in your suit.

2. Be ready to speak about yourself. Your words should contain something to make people take notice of you. Describe briefly your experience at previous jobs and the good results you achieved there.

3. A standard question you may be asked — "Why are you looking for a job?" You should be ready to offer reasons which sound convincing.

4. You should organize your thoughts logically, have self-confidence, and never distort facts or try to persuade people to your way of thinking.

5. You must be ready to answer some unexpected questions: "What are your strong points?" and "What are your weak points?"

Your speech should be illustrated with clear examples. When speaking about your failures or mistakes be sure to emphasize the conclusion you have drawn after analyzing your failures and what they taught you.

Just remember that the capacity to overcome failures and analyze mistakes is valuable to any company.

6. You may be asked what you can do for the company or how you see your future duties. You should learn as much as possible about the company you are dealing with. If possible quote concrete figures or examples so that the interviewer will appreciate the extent of your contribution.

7. What salary are you expecting?

Think of concrete figures – you should base your answer on the average salary of other employees with your qualification.

8. Be ready for practical tests - if you apply for a job as a salesmanager you may be asked to sell something or to express your opinion about how to settle a conflict in a hypothetical situation.

9. At the end of the interview you may ask some questions. You should enquire about what your future job will entail, what possible difficulties there are in store for you, and what the other staff members are like.

10. Some more advice:

1) Never be late. Even if you come too early, it is better to walk around outside than to bother the interviewer about what you should do for the next 20–15 minutes.

2) Remember that your speech should be more than mere words. How you speak sometimes is not as important as what you say.

3) Be yourself – just speak the way you speak with your friends. Try to overcome your nervousness. You can learn to control your nervousness rather than let it get the better of you. Try to accept nervousness as a natural way of helping you to be alert and do your best. Remember it is normal and natural for you to be a little nervous. As you speak, smile and try to change your facial expression to convey the emotions that you feel. A smile coupled with good posture can work wonders.

4) Much attention should be paid to eye contact. You should not look at the floor or at the ceiling. Look into the eyes of the people you are talking to.

Your speech is certain to be enthusiastic and lively.

Now think what kind of person you are.

You may use the following words to describe yourself and other people:

to be reliable	to be well-organised	to be intelligent
to be adaptable	to be flexible	to be loyal to be energetic	to be friendly	to be professional
to be hardworking	to be honest	to be ambitious to be experienced	to be responsible	to be communicative to be modest	to be patient	to be sensitive to be practical	to be independent	to be romantic
to be punctual	to be sociable	to be helpful

What do we mean

1) when we say that a person is:

– reliable, hardworking, sociable, helpful, ambitious, friendly, professional, experienced?

2) when we say that a person is:

– unreliable, dependent, unfriendly, inexperienced, dishonest, indifferent, unsuccessful, irresponsible, helpless, inflexible?

Translate the following words and if you can say in what context you can use them:

to apply	to advertise	to interview
application	advertisement	an interview
applicant	advertiser	interviewer
		interviewee
to employ	to appear	to suit (a suit)
employment	appearance	suitability
employer	to disappear	suitable employee

Economic Concepts for the Social Sciences

This book presents some of the key economic concepts that have guided economic thinking in the last century and identifies which concepts will continue to direct economic thought in the coming decades. It is written in an accessible manner and is intended for a wide audience with little or no formal training in economics.

This treatment will interest economists who want to reflect on the direction of the discipline and to learn about achievements in other subfields. The author imparts his enthusiasm for the economic way of reasoning and its wide applicability. Through the abundant use of illustrations and examples, he makes concepts understandable and relevant. Topics include game theory, market failures, asymmetric information, endogenous growth theory, general equilibrium, rational expectations, and the new institutional economics. Gold is where you find it. This book is solid gold. Clearly, cogently, and cleverly introducing the structure of economic analysis without mathematics, Sandler presents a challenging and comprehensive guide to how to think about the general problems that we face in the broad realm of politics, economics, and policy. This book is a definite treasure for students in politics, sociology, and economics.

What Is Regional Economics?

Economic systems are dynamic entities, and the nature and consequences of changes that take place in these systems are of considerable importance. Such change affects the well-being of individuals and ultimately the social and political fabric of community and nation. As social beings, we cannot help but react to the changes we observe. For some people that reaction is quite passive; the economy changes, and they find that their immediate environment is somehow different, forcing adjustment to the new reality. For others, changes in the economic system represent a challenge; they seek to understand the nature of factors that have led to change and may, in light of that knowledge, adjust their own patterns of behavior or attempt to bring about change in the economic, political, and social systems in which they live and work. In this context, regional economics represents a framework within which the spatial character of economic systems may be understood. We seek to identify the factors governing the distribution of economic activity over space and to recognize that as this distribution changes, there will be important consequences for individuals and for communities. Thus, regional or "spatial" economics might be summed up in the question "What is where, and why—and so what?" The first what refers to every type of economic activity: not only production establishments in the narrow sense of factories, farms, and mines, but also other kinds of businesses, households, and private and public institutions. Where refers to location in relation to other economic activity; it involves questions of proximity, concentration, dispersion, and similarity or disparity of spatial patterns, and it can be discussed either in broad terms, such as among regions, or microgeographically, in terms of zones, neighborhoods, and sites. Regional economics is a relatively young branch of economics. Its late start exemplifies the regrettable tendency of formal professional disciplines to lose contact with one another and to neglect some important problem areas that require a mixture of approaches. Until fairly recently, traditional economists ignored the where question altogether, finding plenty of problems to occupy them without giving any spatial dimension to their analysis. Traditional geographers, though directly concerned with what is where, lacked any real technique of explanation in terms of human behavior and institutions to supply the why, and resorted to mere description and mapping. Traditional city planners, similarly limited, remained preoccupied with the physical and aesthetic aspects of idealized urban layouts. This unfortunate situation has been corrected to a remarkable extent within the last few decades. Individuals who call themselves by various professional labels—economists, geographers, ecologists, city and regional planners, regional scientists, and urbanists—have joined to develop analytical tools and skills, and to apply them to some of the most pressing problems of the time.

Local Inputs and Outputs

One such element of relative advantage is the supply (availability, price, and quality) of local or nontransferable inputs. Local inputs are materials, supplies, or services that are present at a location and could not feasibly be brought in from elsewhere. The use of land is such an input, regardless of whether land is needed just as standing room or whether it also contains minerals or other constituents actually used in the process, as in “extractive” activities such as agriculture or mining. Climate and the quality of the local water and air fall into the same category, as do topography and physical soil structure insofar as they affect construction costs, amenity, and convenience. Locally provided public services such as police and fire protection also are local inputs. Labor (in the short run at least) is another, usually accounting for a major portion of the total input costs. Finally, there is a complex of local amenity features, such as the aesthetic or cultural level of the neighborhood or community that plays an especially important role in residential location preferences. The common feature of all these local input factors is that what any given location offers depends on conditions at that location alone and does not involve transfer of the input from any other location. In addition to requiring some local inputs, the unit choosing a location may be producing some outputs that by their nature have to be disposed of locally. These are called nontransferable outputs. Thus, the labor output of a household is ordinarily used either at home or in the local labor market area, delimited by the feasible commuting range. Community or neighborhood service establishments (barber shops, churches, movie theaters, parking lots, and the like) depend almost exclusively on the immediately proximate market; and, in varying degree, so do newspapers, retail stores, and schools. One type of locally disposed output generated by almost every economic activity is waste. At present, only radioactive or other highly dangerous or toxic waste products are commonly transported any great distance for disposal; though the disposal problem is increasing so rapidly in many areas that we may see a good deal more long-distance transportation of refuse within our lifetimes. Other wastes are just dumped into the air or water or on the ground, with or without incineration or other conversion. In economic terms, a waste output is best regarded as a locally disposed product with negative value. The negative value is particularly large in areas where considerations of land scarcity, air and water pollution, and amenity make disposal costs high; this gives such locations an element of disadvantage for any waste-generating kind of unit. It is not always possible to distinguish unequivocally between a local input and a local output factor. For example, along the Mahoning River in northeastern Ohio, the use of water by industries long ago so heated the river that it could no longer furnish a good year-round supply of water for the cooling required by steam electric generating stations and iron and steel works. In this instance, excess heat is the waste product involved. The thermal pollution handicap to heavy-industry development could be assessed either as a relatively poor supply of a needed local input (cold water) or as a high cost for disposing of a local output (excess heat).

Route Systems and Service Points

There are two distinct reasons for this channelization. One is the economies of traffic volume already referred to as a nearly universal characteristic of transfer. Even primitive societies where all transfer is pedestrian generally develop networks of established trails, which make it easier to move and harder to get lost. Each mode of transfer has its own set of route-volume economies. If these economies are substantial up to a large volume, the route network for that mode will tend to be coarse; if heavier traffic means only small savings, there can be a finer network of routes providing less circuitous connections between points. The second reason for route channelization is that some areas are naturally harder to traverse than others. Thus all modes of land transport have reason to favor level, well-drained land and temperate climate and to avoid unnecessary stream crossings in laying out routes. All routes crossing major mountain ranges funnel into a few selected passes or tunnels. Similarly, ocean shipping routes have to detour around land masses and also have to pay some attention to ocean currents, winds, shoals, iceberg zones, and of course, the availability of harbors. As a result, there is a more or less recognized network of regular “shipping lanes.” Any kind of communications system requiring either fixed-line facilities (such as cables) or relay stations is likewise constrained to a limited set of routes. Scale economies apply not only to route facilities such as trails, track, roads, pipelines, cable, and navigational aids, but also to “service points” where transfer by the mode in question can originate and terminate. Thus there are certain minimum costs of establishing a railroad station or even a siding; the same applies to piggyback terminals, ports for ships and aircraft, transformer stations on long-distance electric transmission lines, and telephone exchanges and switchboards. There is an economic constraint on the spacing of transit stops along a route, since more stops slow the service. People making shopping trips generally prefer to do all their errands with a minimum number of separate stops—except for those who view shopping as a recreation. Consequently, the pattern of transfer services offered by any particular mode is always spotty, linking up a limited number of pairs of points by routes usually longer than the straight-line distance; and a transfer of a specific shipment, person, or item of information from initial origin to final destination frequently entails the use of more than one link or mode. In addition to restricting the number of routes and service points, transfer scale economies in many instances have the effect of making costs and rates lower on more heavily used routes and to and from larger terminals.

External Economies: Output Variety and Market Attraction

In some activities, the basic reason for the agglomerative tendency is that the outputs of individual units are not standardized; they are not perfect substitutes for one another, and moreover, they differ in such manifold and changing ways that they cannot be satisfactorily compared by the buyer without actual inspection. The locational significance of this characteristic can best be seen by a pair of contrasting examples. A manufacturing firm buying sheet steel simply decides on its specifications and then finds out which steel producer will give the best price and fastest delivery. A visit to warehouses or rolling mills to look over the sheets and make a selection is unnecessary, because the specifications themselves (plus conceivably a sample sent for testing in the buyer’s plant or laboratory) fully identify the characteristics of the steel. Consequently, the transfer costs involved are those of shipping the steel from producer to user, and there is nothing in the situation that would make it desirable or convenient for the rival sheet steel producers to be concentrated in one place. Contrast this with a man or woman buying a car or a new hat, a department store selecting its line of fall fashions, or a fashion designer searching for something simply devastating in novelty buttons. In any of these cases, the buyer does not know exactly what will be purchased. He or she will be selecting one item (in the case of the car) or maybe more (in the case of the hat) or a very large number (in the case of the department store's fall line). The items cannot be adequately described in a catalog, and it would be much too expensive and time consuming for the producers to supply each prospective buyer with a full set of samples. Under these circumstances, the "demand" is not so much demand for specific items as it is demand for a varied display of products; and the wider the variety presented at a particular location, the more demand that location will attract. Therefore the buyer makes a shopping trip, preferring the largest display center accessible to him. The more he is prepared to spend, the farther he will be prepared to go in the interest of variety. Thus most of us would be willing to journey farther out of our way to select a camera than a necktie; still farther to select a new car; and still farther to select a job with career possibilities. It is clear that the activity that is presenting the displays will tend to adopt a clustered pattern, with its units positively attracting one another. A newcomer to the cluster may even be welcomed, because that seller will enrich the variety and draw still more demand to the location. It should be noted also that where comparison shopping is important, the significant transfer costs are borne by the buyer, and the major element in transfer costs is personal travel time. The transfer of the goods bought may be handled by the buyer himself (he may drive his new car home or carry his other purchases).

Accountancy or accounting (American English) is the measurement, disclosure or provision of assurance about information that helps managers and other decision makers make resource allocation decisions. Financial accounting is one branch of accounting and historically has involved processes by which financial information about a business is recorded, classified, summarized, interpreted, and communicated. Auditing, a related but separate discipline, is the process whereby an independent auditor examines an organization's financial statements in order to express an opinion (with reasonable but not absolute assurance) as to the fairness and adherence to generally accepted accounting principles, in all material respects. Practitioners of accountancy are known as accountants.

Accountancy attempts to create accurate financial reports that are useful to managers, regulators, and other stakeholders such as shareholders, creditors, or owners. The day-to-day record-keeping involved in this process is known as book-keeping.

At the heart of modern financial accounting is the double-entry book-keeping system. This system involves making at least two entries for every transaction: a debit in one account, and a corresponding credit in another account. The sum of all debits should always equal the sum of all credits. This provides an easy way to check for errors. This system was first used in medieval Europe, although some believe that the system dates back to Ancient Greece.

According to critics of standard accounting practices, it has changed little since. Accounting reform measures of some kind have been taken in each generation to attempt to keep book-keeping relevant to capital assets or production capacity.

Income tax is commonly a progressive tax because the tax rate increases with increasing income. For this reason, it is generally advocated by those who think that taxation should be borne more by the rich than by the poor, even to the point of serving as a form of social redistribution. Some critics characterize this tax as a form of punishment for economic productivity. Other critics charge that income taxation is inherently socially intrusive because enforcement requires the government to collect large amounts of information about business and personal affairs, much of which is considered proprietary and confidential.

Income tax fraud is a problem in most, if not all, countries implementing an income tax. Either one fails to declare income, or declares nonexistent expenses. Failure to declare income is especially easy for non-salaried work, especially those paid in cash. Tax enforcement authorities fight tax fraud using various methods, nowadays with the help of computer databases. They may, for instance, look for discrepancies between declared revenue and expenses along time. Tax enforcement authorities then target individuals for a tax audit – a more or less detailed review of the income and tax-deductible expenses of the individual.

Income tax may be collected from legal entities (e.g., companies) as well as natural persons (individuals), although, in some cases, the income tax on legal entities is levied on a slightly different basis than the income tax on individuals and may be called, in the case of income tax on companies, a corporation tax or a corporate income tax.

A value added tax (sometimes called a goods and services tax, as in Australia and Canada) applies the equivalent of a sales tax to every operation that creates value. To give an example, sheet steel is imported by a machine manufacturer. That manufacturer will pay the VAT on the purchase price, that amount to the government. The manufacturer will then transform the steel into a machine, selling the machine for a higher price to a wholesale distributor. The manufacturer will collect the VAT on the higher price, but will remit to the government only the excess related to the "value added" (the price over the cost of the sheet steel). The wholesale distributor will then continue the process, charging the retail distributor the VAT on the entire price to the retailer, but remitting only the amount related to the distribution markup to the government. The last VAT amount is paid by the eventual retail customer who cannot recover any of the previously paid VAT. Economic theorists have argued that this minimizes the market distortion resulting from the tax, compared to a sales tax.

VAT was historically used when a sales tax or excise tax was uncollectible. For example, a 30% sales tax is so often cheated that most of the retail economy will go off the books. By collecting the tax at each production level, and requiring the previous production level to collect the next level tax in order to recover the VAT previously paid by that production level, the theory is that the entire economy helps in the enforcement. In reality, forged invoices and the like demonstrate that tax evaders will always attempt to cheat the system.

Since individuals typically earn their incomes from working for companies whose requirements are constantly changing, it is quite possible that at any given time not all members of a country's potential work force will be able to find an employer that needs their labor. This would be less problematic in an economy in which such individuals had unlimited access to resources such as land in order to provide for themselves, but when the ownership of the bulk of its productive capacity resides in relatively few hands, most individuals will be dependent on employment for their economic well-being. It is typical for true capitalist economies to have rates of unemployment that fluctuate between 3% and 15%. Some economists have used the term "natural rate of unemployment" to describe this phenomenon.

Depressed or stagnant economies have been known to reach unemployment rates as high as 30%, while events such as military mobilization (a good example is that of World War II) have resulted in just 1-2% unemployment, a level that is often termed "full employment". Typical unemployment rates in Western economies range between 5% and 10%. Some economists consider that a certain level of unemployment is necessary for the proper functioning of capitalist economies. Equally, some politicians have claimed that the "natural rate of unemployment" highlights the inefficiency of a capitalist economy, since not all its resources – in this case human labor – are being allocated efficiently.

Some unemployment is voluntary, such as when a potential job is turned down because the unemployed person is seeking a better job, is voluntarily living on savings, or has a non-wage-earning role, such as in the case of a traditional homemaker. Some measures of employment disregard these categories of unemployment, counting only people who are actively seeking work and have been unable to find any.
